The following is an examiner's statement of reasons for allowance:

The prior art, specifically USPN 6,030,358 and GB 1567122, fail to teach alone or in combination a method of delivering a therapeutic agent to selected sites within an organism that includes the limitations of a catheter that includes a tubular section having a lumen and solid sections and a microporous membrane section, a solid catheter tip attached to the distal end of the catheter and inserted into the lumen, the solid and microporous sections forming a continuous cross section of the tubular section which has a substantially uniform diameter and in combination with the catheter being configured to allow the therapeutic agent to fill the lumen until a predetermined luminal pressure exceeding the external pressure of the selected site(s) is reached and the microporous membrane section is (diffusion sections are) configured to deliver the therapeutic agent at the predetermined luminal pressure. The prior art also fails to teach a method of delivering a therapeutic agent to selected sites within an organism that includes the limitations of at least two catheters including a tubular section with a solid section, a diffusion section, an outer tubular wall and an inner tubular wall where the outer tubular wall has at least one opening through to the inner tubular wall and the inner tubular wall is lined with a microporous membrane in combination with the catheters being configured to allow the therapeutic agent to fill the lumen until a predetermined luminal pressure exceeding the external pressure of the selected site(s) is reached and the diffusion section is configured to deliver the therapeutic agent at the predetermined luminal pressure.
